RE: Patient Referral

Patient: Mr. Duncan Banquo

DOB: 11/08/1975

NHI: BAN1975

Dear Urology Team,

I am writing to refer Mr. Duncan Banquo, a 50-year-old man, for assessment of some perplexing and persistent pelvic symptoms.

For the past six months, Mr. Banquo has been troubled by a nagging, deep-seated ache in his perineal area, which he finds difficult to localise. This is accompanied by moderate urinary frequency and a sensation of a weak stream. His symptoms are chronic and have a significant impact on his quality of life, though he is otherwise systemically well.

His PSA, checked a year ago, was 1.5 µg/L. A recent test showed it had risen to 4.8 µg/L. We repeated this after four weeks, and it is now 5.0 µg/L. A digital rectal examination revealed a prostate that was normal in size and smooth, but was markedly tender to palpation, with no discrete nodules felt. A mid-stream urine culture was negative.

This presentation is puzzling. The combination of a rising PSA and a tender prostate is concerning, but the clinical picture does not align with a simple infection. I would be grateful for your expert opinion to rule out more serious pathology and to guide management for his chronic symptoms.

Thank you for your time.

Yours sincerely,

Dr. Hecate Seyton
