RE: Patient Referral

Patient: Mr. Mark Labbett
DOB: 29/06/2009
NHI: LAB2009
Dear Urology Team,

I am writing to refer Mr. Mark Labbett, a 16-year-old student who initially attended for a routine sports medical.

During the consultation, he mentioned that he has noticed on at least two separate occasions in the past month that his urine appeared unusually dark, akin to the colour of cola. This was painless and resolved spontaneously each time.

He has no other significant urinary symptoms, denying any frequency, urgency, or nocturia. However, given his report, I proceeded with a more detailed examination. His PSA, checked as a baseline, is 2.5 µg/L. A digital rectal examination was difficult due to patient discomfort, but I noted a distinct area of induration on the right posterior aspect of the prostate.

On direct questioning about any other issues, he admitted, with some embarrassment, to also being aware of a painless change in his right testicle over the last few weeks. On examination, it feels substantially firmer than the left, with an area that feels quite solid.

Given this constellation of findings, I would be grateful for your urgent assessment.

Thank you for your time.

Yours sincerely,

Dr. Anne Hegerty
